Fishergate Postern Tower

Fishergate Postern Tower (FPT) was built around 1505. It is at the end of Piccadilly, beside a little gateway at an end of the walls. Water once filled the gap between this tower and York Castle. It has four floors, a narrow spiral staircase, an unusually complete Tudor toilet and many masons' marks. The present roof was probably added by 1600 when this turned open battlements into the row of square windows all round the top floor.

Friends of York Walls lease the tower from the City of York Council. Displays here are about the tower and the history of the City Walls. Entry is free on our open days, and we can also open for payment. Planned 2026 Open Day dates are listed in the next column.

For £20, you can "Sponsor a Stone" in your name or for someone else – you choose a stone on an external wall of the tower, then a certificate and book entries link that stone uniquely to the name you give [the next column explains how to sponsor your own stone]. Currently we need money for better displays, and for running costs. Please help FOYW to promote York's City Walls, and to carry on returning the tower to fuller community use.

Please help us -

We are an all-volunteer charity that helps people understand and enjoy York's old defensive walls. Joining the email list for our bi-monthly newsletter is FREE. To become a full friend: volunteer or make a donation. Please use our website at:- www.yorkwalls.org.uk or, alternatively, send us an email at: friendsofyorkwalls@yorkwalls.org.uk

We would like to do more but we need more volunteers - as guides at FPT, to help us with publicity, as walks and talks guides, to join the committee, become a trustee, etc..

Sponsoring a Stone

Stones can be sponsored on the website, or by sending an email message to: stones@yorkwalls.org.uk

York's City Walls

York's old City Walls are the most complete in England. They were built mainly in the 13th century on top of older earth banks. There are a few bits of dry moat left around the banks. The slopes are well known for their daffodils in March and April. At other times they are grassy or covered with wild flowers.

A walk all round the Walls (going up on the wall-walk, or just using the pavement outside them) takes about 2 hours. It will take longer if you pause much to look at things like the four main 'bars' (these are fortified gateways), the 2 lesser bars, the postern (this is a small gateway defended by a tower), the many other towers and details like arrow slits, musket loops, sculptures and masons' marks. There are also good views of many interesting buildings from up on the walls. The wall-walk is usually open daily from 8.00 am till dusk, but may not open in bad weather. For details see City of York Council web page www.york.gov.uk/york-city-centre/city-walls/3

Wheelchairs, pushchairs and dogs are not practical up on the narrow wall-walk, but they are fine in the Museum Gardens where you can see York's best Roman walls. These include the Multangular Tower which is topped with a row of arrow-slits from the time it was made a part of the City Walls. Also here are the remains of St Mary's Abbey - they include England's best abbey-defending walls. These, along with Clifford's Tower, the castle wall nearby and the City Walls, were all built at about the same time using the same Magnesian Limestone.

You can do a self-guided walk by using the Friends of York Walls website "Walls Trail" pages [FREE], or the book "A Walking Guide to York's City Walls" [£6.99], or the new "York's City Walls Audio Trail" [£1.99 via the Guide.AI app, guide ID 80].
